CONGRESS

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 5.

DEBATE

On Mr. Randolph's motion for the appointment of a committee of enquiry into the official conduct of SAMUEL CHASE.

Mr. Gregg said he should vote against the postponement and in favor of the resolution. The case was somewhat new, but he perceived no impropriety in giving it the same direction with all the other business originated in the house. What is this committee to be appointed for? To investigate facts, and report them to the House. Was it not most proper that gentlemen whose characters were implicated should have, in the first instance, facts stated privately before a committee, than that parts of their character should be immediately brought into view before the House? He recollected one fact not yet alluded to in debate. In 1792 after the army, under the command of General St. Clair, was defeated, great dissatisfaction arose, and the character of the commander was implicated. The idea was that the expedition had not been conducted with propriety. The business was brought before Congress. It was understood at that time, whether justly or not Mr. Gregg would not pretend to say, that the commander in chief could not be tried by a court martial. Congress therefore took up the business and appointed a committee of enquiry, who went through a lengthy examination of the subject. Mr. Gregg mentioned this precedent that gentlemen might turn their attention to it.

Mr. R. Griswold. I had hoped that the language used by me, when I was up before, would not have led gentlemen to suppose that I was acting as the friend or the enemy of judge Chase. I am acting in neither capacity. I am acting only as a member of this house, who ought to be anxious on an occasion of such importance to take that course which is most consistent with propriety, that course which results from the duty this house owes the nation, and that duty which they owe the character of a judge. It did appear to me that it was not correct to call the character of a public officer into question, unless some necessity should first appear. No facts are presented on this occasion. The gentleman from Virginia has said that he is in possession of facts, or of something, that makes him believe that an enquiry is proper; but he does not choose to communicate these facts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has given us his information. The question is whether it is proper on these light suggestions to institute a solemn enquiry into the character of this judge. It appears to me that we ought not to throw any imputation on the character of any officer without evidence that such an enquiry is necessary. The case mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Gregg) does not apply. Dissatisfaction existed in the country and in the house on the events of a campaign; an enquiry was instituted; but what was its object? The committee were appointed to enquire into the general causes of the failure of the expedition; they were not instructed to enquire into the character of a particular officer.

The gentleman from Virginia has referred to another case, when he says we were ready enough to institute an enquiry, and has left it to be inferred that the enquiry was made without any previous proof of its necessity. But certainly on that occasion enquiry was not made without proof. I suppose the enquiry alluded to was that which related to the conduct of the commissioners of the sinking fund. It was instituted on a report made by them, and which we thought was not satisfactory. The resolution offered was adopted, and enquiry was made, the result of which is well known to every gentleman. It follows, therefore, that there are no precedents adduced, which apply to the present case.

It is my wish that the proceedings of this House may on this occasion be perfectly correct, and that we may not be precipitated into the adoption of this resolution without due consideration. If it is correct to vote an enquiry in all cases, where a member rises on this floor and desires it, it is correct to vote it in this case. In this case a gentleman rises and says he is satisfied an enquiry ought to take place. The question is whether it is proper to enquire into the conduct of a public officer, who has been accused of a crime, and who is a member of the House of Representatives. The course has been pursued. The appointment of a committee of enquiry originated from a message of the President. We find in February, 1803, the house received the following message.

"The enclosed letter and affidavits exhibiting matter of complaint against John Pickering, district judge of New-Hampshire, which is not within executive cognizance, I transmit them to the House of Representatives, to whom the constitution has confided a power of instituting proceedings of redress, if they shall be of opinion that the case calls for them."

This message was referred to a committee, with the accompanying papers, furnishing evidence of the necessity of an enquiry. But the course pursued to-day is very different. A gentleman gets up, and moves an enquiry into the conduct of judge Chase, and says that he is of the opinion that it ought to be made. This course, I think, is incorrect. Some facts ought first to be adduced—I repeat it, I am on this occasion neither the friend nor the enemy of judge Chase. I am the friend of this house: I wish their proceedings to be correct, and I hope they will not do hastily what they may hereafter regret.

"Nam et priusquam incipias, consulta, et ubi con-suleris, mature facta, opus est."

SALLUST.

The United States have for a considerable time, been engaged in a war with the regency of Tripoli. Instead of being near a conclusion, the recent success of the barbarians in capturing the best of our frigates, has rendered the prospect of peace more distant than ever. Our officers and seamen, during the whole course of the war have uniformly displayed a determined zeal in the discharge of their duty, and a proper regard for the glory of their country. It is not my intention, in the course of the following observations, to censure their conduct in the slightest degree; I design only to examine whether the protraction of the war may not be attributed to the improper conduct of administration.

It is worthy of enquiry what are the views of government in the war. Is it by conquering the Tripolitans, to avoid the ignominy of tribute? Or is it to lessen the enormity of their demands? In either case the conduct of the administration is marked by a want of wisdom and energy. Experience has demonstrated that an attempt to conquer the Barbary powers will be fruitless. If Charles the V, who possessed the treasures of two worlds, whose armies were inured to labor and thoroughly disciplined in the long and bloody wars which his ambition excited in Europe, and whose dominions were within sight of the African coast, was unable to make a permanent impression on the barbarians; the supposition is rational, that an attempt on the part of the United States to effect a conquest at the distance of more than three thousand miles; and without any of those resources which were possessed by the Spanish monarch, will only betray the weakness of government and the incapacity of its administrators. Let us however, for a moment suppose that we could succeed in effecting a landing; that in an encounter with the natives the valor of our troops should prevail and by infusing a terror into the barbarians, produce submission to the United States. Does any rational man suppose that the conquest would be permanent; that the neighbouring powers would calmly behold, in the destruction of Tripoli, the prelude to their own annihilation? On the contrary, the expectation of a similar fate would arm the whole coast of barbarians from Barca to Morocco. The supposition, however, of the submission of the inhabitants is chimerical. They must be utterly extirpated before the country could be firmly annexed to the United States; and I am persuaded that the philosophic Jefferson would revolt at a measure so repugnant to his philanthropy. If the inhabitants are extirpated, the United States must incur the expense of a numerous army, which must be permanently established in the country to prevent its occupation by new tribes of Mahometans. This would be so entirely repugnant to the economy of our administration, that Mr.

The best frigate, hundred of officers of Africa, friends of administration, calamities are to tune of war, which could foresee; Mr. sufficiently acknowledge formerly employed, purposes of the war measures which he had possessed a piece of which his station deduced, known that a lingering of ly to increase the obsequies, and that they are to be red reason only by the pressure of im calamity. To conclude the war nor and advantage, and in such as will deter them from future force must be employed sufficient their town to ashes.

It was in this manner that Blake chastised the insolence of and infused a terror of the English. The same success will attend our Mr. Jefferson will act with the man, and the liberality which became chief magistrate of a great nation him equip a competent force and dispatch it to the Mediterranean, with instructions to bombard Tripoli, our seamen as brave and skilful; we shall then no more be insulted with accounts of the triumphs of a petty bashaw. I will venture to assert that if the expedition fails, it will be owing to the elements, not to the arms of the

LIVERPOOL, March 14.

French Conspiracy.

Ample details of Moreau's arrest, and the proceedings which have attended it in Paris, have been already given. The subject, as might be expected, has given rise to much speculation among our countrymen, as to the truth or falsehood of the charges. Is it, perhaps, premature to offer a decided opinion; but a variety of considerations render it probable that the whole is a political stratagem, caused by the fears and jealousies which Bonaparte entertains of the great military talents, of the amiable character and the influence of this very distinguished officer over the army, as well as over a vast majority of the French nation.

Whatever may be the feelings of Moreau, either against the Consul or democracy, for it must not be forgotten that on the very day when he achieved one of his greatest victories over the Austrians, his father was guillotined in Paris on supposition of being an Aristocrat, we cannot bring ourselves to think that he could indulge in so extravagant a scheme as that of reinstating the Burbons on the throne of France.

The great mass of Frenchmen who have joined the revolution, have committed crimes or purchased national property, all dread the Burbons as their greatest enemies, while they regard Moreau as the only restraint upon the tyranny of Bonaparte, and in the event of the overthrow of the present government, their principal security against the restoration of the Burbons, and the consequent punishment of their crimes. Bonaparte also knows that if the Burbons possess the unavailing piety of Princes, Moreau has commanded their admiration, is worthy of their esteem, and has the good wishes of all the disappointed patriots, philosophers, and republicans. Every lover of freedom is his friend, while Bonaparte is now disliked by all men of every country, who understand his character; he, who promised his dupes universal liberty as the certain fruit of the revolution, and now make them drink the bitter dregs of slavery and oppression.

The blow that Bonaparte is now striking

Liverpool, March 6, 1804.

From a Richmond paper of the 18th ult.

On Monday last, a person charged with counterfeiting bank notes, was examined in this city before Daniel I. Hylton, Esq. It is said that he is from the county of Buckingham, and that he is a man of considerable wealth. He is now confined in the jail of Richmond; but it is supposed by some people, that he will be admitted to bail.
The circumstances of this case are of a singular nature.

We were not present when he was examined before Mr. Hylton, but we are told that he had made repeated applications to an engraver of this city, to prepare him a plate, which excited suspicion. The latter it is said, gave immediate information to some influential characters in town, that advised him to engrave any plate or plates this person might require. And in obedience to a subsequent solicitation, the engraver proceeded to prepare a plate of two, with which a number of notes were worked off, that bore a tolerable resemblance to those of the United States bank. We cannot undertake to say that attempts have been made to pass any of this late impression of bank notes; but it is rational to conclude, that they were prepared for the purpose of defrauding the citizens of the United States. It is conjectured, that there are other persons concerned in this nefarious business, and the accuracy of this conjecture will probably be ascertained in a very short time.

Truth and Democracy incompatible.

We have seen the valedictory Address of the Editor of the National Aegis, which exhibits a specimen of that lucid elegance of style and nervous diction, in which he unquestionably stands without a rival among the democratic writers.
Equally as devoid of the unblushing effrontery, which characterizes the unfounded assertions and impudent falsehoods of Duane and Cheetham, as unpractised in the subtle arts of the fine spun sophistry of the courtly Smith, he has proved himself incompetent to wield the pen any longer in defence of the present administration. Talents, which would have enabled him to command a conspicuous eminence among the supporters of truth, only tended to render him odious to his fellow labourers in the cause of democracy. They have hastened to drive him off the stage, as an unprofitable servant; because he has professed himself a friend to honesty of principles, disconnected with political sentiments.

It has several times fallen to our lot to notice in Mr. Blake, that conflicts between the love of truth & the attempts to advocate the measures of a wicked faction, which distracted his editorial labors.
One while an ingenious candor would instinctively impel him to acknowledge the truth, as in the case of the famous Geoffroy letters; at another, we see him, as if alarmed at what he had done and routed by the reprehensions of Duane, recanting his former assertions and declaring his belief of Mr. Rutledge's guilt. Not possessor of sufficient firmness and resolution to maintain his own ground after undertaking to exercise an independent opinion, he yielded the point and deigned to follow when perhaps a conscious rectitude and upright intention entitled him to lead.

Such a "position" to an honest mind must have been "obscure, unsupportable and comfort-less" in the extreme and it is by no means matter of surprise, that he should wish with all his heart to take a final leave of it. As long as the imported patriots Duane, and Cheetham, command the phalanx of Democratic Editors; it is impossible for any subaltern coadjutor in the cause to continue long in the ranks unless he be as unprincipled and wicked as themselves. They are the self created organs of the public will and if any of those should presume to publish opinions different from their own, will denounce him as they have done Mr. Blake, "a traitor and an apostate from his party."

In his farewell address, he had not omitted to interweave with his justification some accrimoni-ous reflections on Federal measures and excepting these, we cannot but agree, that the sentiments are correct and afford a demonstrative proof of the incompatibility of the honest love of truth with an adherence to the principles of the ruling faction.

Literary Selections.

The following humorous account of a political and allegorical drama is from the pen of Sir Richard Steele.

The author of the play has represented Absolute Power in the person of a tall man, with a hat and feather, who gives his first minister, that stands just before him, a huge kick; the minister gives the kick to the next before; and so on to the end of the stage. In this moral and practicable jest, you are made to understand, that there is, in absolute government, no gratification but giving the kick you receive from one above you to one below you. This is performed to a grave and melancholy air; but on a sudden the tune moves quicker, and the whole company fall into a circle and take hands; then, at a certain sharp note, they move round and kick as kick can.— This latter performance he makes to be the representation of a free state, where, if you all mind your steps, you may go round and round very jollily, with a motion pleasant to yourselves and those you dance with; nay, if you put yourselves out, at the worst you only kick and are kicked like friends and equals.

There is nothing so disagreeable in works of humour as an insipid, unsupported, vivacity; the very husks of drollery; bottled small-beer; a man outriding his horse; lewdness and impotence; a fiery actor in a phlegmatick scene; an illiterate and stupid preacher discoursing upon urim and thummim, and beating the pulpit cushion in such a manner, as though he would make the dust and the truth fly out of it at once.

To facilitate to claimants under the 7th receipt of their monies in instances in which they have not constituted the public agent in London, their special attorney, it has been thought proper to draw to the United instructed to cease paying them after that date, but after the 1st of November

Department of State,
April 28, 1804.

The schooner, Eagle, which arrived at Baltimore on Saturday from Bordeaux, should have brought Paris papers to the 12th March, but we have not been able to obtain any by her.— The captain states that the minds of the people appeared to be completely stupified at Bordeaux, that no political news could be learnt there.— Perhaps the letters by her may throw some new light upon the apparently critical situation of public men and measures in France. (Fed. Gaz.)

Capt. Knowles, arrived at Boston, in 68 days from the Isle of France, informs, that the news of the destruction of Benicoolen had been confirmed; and that an official account had been received of the surrender of Pondicherry to the English. The French troops who defended the place for a time with great bravery were allowed the terms of capitulation which they had asked for.

Capt. Knowles further informs, that the privateers of that port had not been very successful in their cruises against the English commerce in those seas; several of them had returned a few days before he failed without having met with a single prize.

Capt. Myrick, who arrived at Boston on 20th ult. from Batavia, in the ship Indus, informs, that a French squadron of one 74, two frigates and the corvette Berceau, (probably that commanded by Admiral Linis) failed from Batavia the 8th Dec.; which previous to the arrival of the Indus had destroyed the English per-er magazines at Benicoolen, from the island of Sumatra to the amount, it was said, of from 15 to 20,000 picols;—and the same squadron had captured an English ship at Benicoolen, with a valuable cargo of Calcutta and Madras goods, and sent her to the Isle of France.

Accounts from the coast of Africa state, that the Isle of Goree, had been assaulted, and captured by a French national vessel, and privateers from Cayenne.

The Calcutta Gazette of December 5 says, when the American ship Adventure left Mauritius, (on the 8th of September) there were six American ships there taking in cargoes for America—and that the Marengo, 80 gun ship, had her mast out, the frigates were caulked and undergoing repairs, but no probability of firing out of privateers. An American ship had been taken up by the Batavian government, at eighty thousand dollars for the voyage, to proceed to Japan, for the annual cargo, the failed from Batavia about the middle of July—we understand that owing to some religious ceremony amongst the Japanese, the Dutch annual ship is obliged to quit the island whether loaded, or not, on the 22 of November—the Japan ship generally arrives at Batavia about the latter end of December, this ship is commonly valued at about 500,000 dollars.

For the interest of our employers, as well as the merchants of the United States in general, We the subscribers, masters of American vessels at present in this port, conceive it our duty in this public manner to state the inconveniences and grievances we labor under, on account of the disorderly behaviour of our seamen, who leave our ships at discretion, without any cause or reason whatever, (except that they give higher wages in the British service) and the civil authority of this country will not render us any assistance in the recovery of them; they say that a contract made in America, is not binding in this country.
There are no ships but what have lost more or less of their men, and some their whole crews, which causes a detention of 10 days or two weeks before other men could be obtained. The majority of those that leave us, enter on board British vessels, and we are not permitted to carry away any of the seamen of this country. The effect resulting thus, we do not mean to consider no conspiracy has been formed against the Consul, but we wish to shew the policy of Bonaparte's mind and heart attempting to take away the life of Mo-

This lottery has been authorized by the legislature of Virginia, for the laudable purpose of erecting a seminary of learning in or near the metropolis of this state. With this view, it is contemplated to raise 20,000 dollars, and 2,500 dollars in addition, for defraying the expenses attendant on drawing the lottery. Citizens of the first respectability have been selected as trustees, and they have pledged themselves to use their utmost exertions to carry it into effect. The scheme has the advantage of giving to each adventurer, a chance for some very large prizes, whilst the proportion of prizes to blanks, is so great as to invite the friends of the intended institution to partake of the lottery, with very little risk of their becoming losers. The treasurer of this state is to be appointed to receive the money for the tickets as they are sold, and to pay the amount of the prizes to the fortunate adventurers. It is believed that the above considerations will induce a rapid sale of tickets and the drawing will commence as soon as a sufficient number shall be sold to authorize it—which it is believed will be on the second Monday in December next.
